Fiduciary Liability Claim Scenarios

Example	Cost	Description
Excessive Fees/Imprudent Investments	$8M+	In a class action lawsuit filed in the United States against the sponsor and fiduciaries of a defined contribution plan, the participants alleged breach of fiduciary duties in failing to negotiate lower recordkeeping fees, improper selection of investment options, and failure to monitor the outside investment manager. Defence costs exceeded $3 million, and the case was ultimately settled for over $5 million.
Health &amp; Welfare Plan Denial of Benefits	$175,000	A recently married employee submitted paperwork through the company HR department to add the new spouse to their medical plan. A few months later, the employee's spouse developed a serious medical condition. After the spouse was denied coverage under the employee's medical plan, it was found that the spouse was never added. The employee then turned to the employer for payment of the medical bills that were denied due to the failure to add the spouse, and the matter was settled for $175,000.

Fiduciary Liability FAQs

Who is a fiduciary?

Fiduciary status is determined by the function performed for the plan, not by title. Fiduciaries do not have to be named in the plan documents to meet the criteria. Fiduciary duties apply to individuals who exercise discretionary authority or control over a plan or its assets, or who provide investment advice to a plan for a fee.

Will an ERISA bond or Employee Benefits Liability (EBL) insurance provide adequate coverage?

An ERISA bond is first-party insurance that can afford coverage for the plan for losses caused by theft, but does not address lawsuits brought by third parties. EBL insurance typically provides limited coverage for certain wrongful acts related to errors in plan administration. Neither provides coverage for breach of fiduciary duty claims under ERISA or the Pension Benefit Standards Act, 1985.
